

JOIN US FOR THE SAMARITAN HOSPITAL REUNION AT HOMECOMING & FAMILY WEEKEND!

Don't you love stories, the way stories unfold and the way stories are told? We are all shaped by story. We live out our existence within the context of shared stories—families have stories, churches have stories, even businesses have stories. Throughout life we hold on to the characters and plot developments of the stories that are meaningful to us. They become our guiding narrative. Neal Postman says it this way, "Our genius lies in our capacity to make meaning through the creation of narratives that give point to our labors, exalt our history, elucidate the present, and give direction to our future."

The NNU Centennial is a time for storytelling. We pause to remember, to retell stories, to laugh, to cry, for each of us associated with NNU has a story to tell. It is our story, but it is also part of the NNU story. It is the convergence of these two entities—individual and university—that yields the life-shaping narratives that each of us is writing, and each of us remembers.

We will soon launch the Northwest Nazarene University Centennial Celebration. We light the Centennial candles at the 2012 Centennial Homecoming Kickoff and blow out the candles at the 2013 Centennial Homecoming Finale. Amidst the reunions and revelry we want to listen to our story. To better accomplish this NNU Centennial goal, we have sought the able and expert assistance of two of NNU's favorite sons—Dr. Richard Etulain and Dr. Gaymon Bennett. In no small measure they stand as tellers of our century-long story.

At the November 2012 Centennial Homecoming Kickoff we will unveil two complementary works that tell the NNU story.

Seeking First the Kingdom: Northwest Nazarene University—A Centennial Story is the official centennial story as researched and told by NNU alumnus Dr. Richard Etulain, Class of '59. Dr. Etulain accepted the commission to write this work from President Emeritus Dr. Richard Hagood. He conducted extensive research in multiple archives, correspondence and interviews. The result is a sweeping account of the NNU story from sagebrush beginnings to a university on the rise.

Spirit of Place: Recollections & Remembrances of NNC/NNU 1913-2013 is the pictorial counterpart to the Centennial narrative. Dr. Gaymon Bennett, NNU alumnus, Class of '64 and Emeritus Professor of English, has compiled and edited a work that features stories written by more than 60 NNU alumni. The work of Dr. Bennett and these alumni story-tellers has been masterfully set, by NNU Professor of Graphic Arts Paul Kinsman in a pictorial volume that features NNC/NNU photos from across the years.

Each of us connected to NNU has a part in the NNU story. Just read three Messenger articles that follow—words of hope, a pioneer professor committed to excellence, young alumni changing lives, a legacy of caring. I hope you'll make it a point to secure a copy of each of these two works (they're being sold together) to read, see and remember our story, the NNU story.

PIONEERING HOLINESS EDUCATION: THE LEGACY OF OLIVE WINCHESTER The first professor at NNC with a doctorate, Olive Winchester left a profound mark on NNC, the Church of the Nazarene and the world.

Pioneering holiness education: THE LEGACY

By Pam Estell

Olive Winchester would probably never regard herself as a pioneer. The fact that her personal journey resulted in opening doors for others to walk through would, to her, have been a happy coincidence. To Olive, her life's calling wasn't a destination but an excursion to be lived out one day at a time, closely following the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Born on November 22, 1879 in Monson, Maine, Olive May Winchester was the daughter of Charles and Sarah (Blackstone) Winchester. Although brought up in a modest home, Olive was the niece of Oliver Winchester and as such, an heiress to a portion of his Winchester repeating rifle fortune. This and other inheritances would open doors later in life to pursue her calling.

A few years after her father's untimely death, Winchester became a Christian as a young teenager and an early member of the Association of Pentecostal Churches of America (which later merged with the Church of the Nazarene). This decision was a pivotal moment in Olive's journey, as it laid the foundation for her insatiable hunger for scripture and knowledge of this new faith.

OF OLIVE WINCHESTER

Using her inheritances, Olive financed her own education first at Radcliffe Ladies College (then a division of Harvard University) in Cambridge, Mass. graduating cum laude with a bachelor of arts degree in Hebrew and Arabic; then at the University of Glasgow, in Glasgow, Scotland where she earned a bachelor of divinity; next, at the Pacific School of Religion in Berkeley, Calif. where she graduated magna cum laude with a master of sacred theology; and finally at Drew University in Madison, New Jersey, where she earned a doctor of theology from the Divinity School.

During her lifetime she broke several gender barriers: for being the first woman to be admitted to the University of Glasgow in Scotland and graduate with a bachelor of divinity; becoming the first woman to be ordained in the United Kingdom for Christian Ministry; and finally, being the first woman to graduate with a Th.D. from Drew University.

A tenacious woman, Olive's experience both in the church and in academia gave her a powerful longing to see religious education perpetuate holiness work. Highly educated, full of integrity, and extraordinarily zealous, these qualities made her a coveted instructor and led to teaching positions at several colleges. During her tenure at the Pacific School of Religion, she became fast friends with H. Orton Wiley, who, at the time was pastor of the Berkeley Church of the Nazarene. He later went on to become president of Northwest Nazarene College and was so moved by Winchester's breadth of knowledge and passion for transformative faith in education that he asked Olive to join him at NNC teaching biblical literature and theology (later adding sociology and religious education).

The first professor at NNC with an earned doctorate, Olive was a "confident woman, ambitious, and one who did not suffer easily by those who sternly or off-handedly tried to bully her or other professors" (Seeking First the Kingdom). A "rock of stability and devotion," Olive took her position as instructor (and later, dean and vice president of NNC) very seriously, assigning students 25-page research papers and book reports on collateral reading, believing the information would be useful for a lifetime. She was demanding yet fair in her expectations. Former student Ross Price once noted, "The student always felt he earned whatever grade he made for the course."

"Winchester was not the only woman to teach religion at Nazarene colleges, but [she] far surpassed the others in academic background and achievement," said Stan Ingersol (Our Nazarene Foremothers). In a history of Northwest's first quarter-century, it was said of Olive that "she contributed very much to the development of the right attitude toward scholastic standards ...and had much to do with the internal organization of the institution." Also noted, "At the center of her legacy stood the undeniable fact that she was a pivotal figure in the transition of Northwest Nazarene College from a sagebrush academy to a sound academic institution."

Olive firmly believed in the marriage of sound holiness theology with superior higher education. She once said of education, "We feel that a good, wholesome religious life administers to educational standards." To her, there was no difference between the two—they simply went hand-in-hand, and she worked diligently to indoctrinate those standards.

Winchester's mark on NNC was profound and her contributions throughout history global. During her lifetime she taught and/or held administrative positions at three Nazarene colleges and Parkhead Holiness Bible School; she was instrumental in the merger of the Pentecostal Church of Scottland and the Church of the Nazarene, and she spent much of her time and money furthering missions projects both locally and abroad.

Olive's own words, spoken when her portrait was dedicated at NNC, provide perhaps the best indication of what motivated her accomplishments: "I'm sending out my students into the stream of life and society. Years from now, away down that river, they will bring ashore my precepts and my teaching. My prayer is that my influence will carry the influence of Christian ideals learned here at NNC into many a distant port there to bless this and coming generations of humanity."

Built on the grounds of what now belongs to Northwest Nazarene University, Samaritan year, NNU's current Fine Arts Hospital was established as a school for nurses in 1920 by Dr. and Mrs. Thomas Mangum. (pictured above) Its particular emphasis was to provide medical training for nurses going to the mission field. Although the school was not directly connected to Northwest Nazarene College, its students were able to participate in the life of the college by taking several courses there in addition to their nursing classes. Until 1926, the hospital and school were located in a house built by the Mangums; but that same Building was constructed and the nursing academic program was fully accredited by the state of Idaho.

The school provided an excellent education for its time and especially for the region. Mary Wardlaw came to the hospital as a student in 1947 with the hope of becoming a missionary, and she recalls that the students' daily schedules were rigorous. Each day began at 6 a.m. in the hospital's prayer chapel where the students gathered for a time of communion and prayer. Work-assisting in patient care-started at 7 a.m. sharp.

"We'd meet in the stairway between the first and second floors to sing," she said, "and the patients seemed to like that. The prayer chapel, breakfast and singing got us started too." Younger students took classes during the mornings, and the older students traded places with them in the afternoon. Each junior class spent six months of their studies in Colorado: three at a children's hospital in Denver followed by three more at a psychiatric hospital in Colorado Springs.

Students served in a variety of areas of the hospital, and Wardlaw remembers having very little downtime. "We were assigned to bathe patients and change the linens and take care of whatever needs they had. Upperclassmen learned how to give medications and were assigned just to do that. And then we cooking for the patients. "We worked in the diet kitchen, and that was interesting. The cooks in the hospital only had to cook the food that was for general diets, but there were a lot of patients on special diets, so we had to cook those. Samaritan was the only hospital I knew of that would have nurses do that."

Wardlaw reflects that the hospital had a definite family atmosphere, that everyone helped each other and got along, and that the doctors were very accommodating with the students —something she would come to appreciate when working in other hospitals.

Most of all, Wardlaw said that the hospital kept spiritual growth a priority. "We not only on nursing schools that required them to provide experience in five different categories of patient cases. The school at Samaritan Hospital did not meet the requirements and was shut down in 1954. Although patient care still flourished at the new center, the closing was an unfortunate event for the community since the quality of training the school had provided was no longer available in the region—specifically, training with a missional emphasis in mind intended to prepare students for the medical field in the larger view of God's kingdom.

PERSEVERANCE

By Ashlee Chaffee, Class of 2008

Reflecting on Trevor Hall's ('00) early college years, NNU Chair of the Department of Psychology Dr. Glena Andrews recalls, "Trevor was very interested in and very skilled in snowboarding, and at times, coursework came second. This priority changed during his later years at NNU."

Fast-forward eight years to 2008 when Trevor returned to campus as the keynote speaker at NNU's Psychology Research Forum. At the time, he was conducting research on the correlation between autism and cholesterol metabolism at Oregon Health & Science University (OHSU). Parents at the forum shared their struggles with local care, and the discussion weighed heavy on his heart. It wasn't long afterward that Trevor received a job offer from a group wanting to start an integrated care clinic in Boise.

Trevor, Psy.D., moved his wife, Carrie, and two boys, Jadon and Ian, to Boise, but by December 2008, the clinic was failing. "Seeing the writing on the wall, I filed paperwork with the State of Idaho to bring Northwest Neurobehavioral Health (NNH) into existence," Trevor says.

"All along I had maintained my faculty position at OHSU so the temptation to go 'home' was great. My thoughts swirled with, What am I going to do? I am not cut out to be in private practice. Did God really call us here? This is when I felt like Peter—I had jumped out of the boat and was starting to sink," Trevor shares. "I was also reminded of how in the early church there was often a pattern—first the call, second the resistance, third the perseverance and then fourth the blessing."

Enter Jeff Hall ('01) and his wife Rebekah Ponsford-Hall ('01). The couple had recently moved back to the Boise Valley to complete Jeff's pre-doctoral internship and Rebekah's post-doctoral fellowship at a Boise counseling center run by the Children's Home Society of Idaho (CHS). It was this connection that would allow NNH to take its next step toward formation.

Jeff and Trevor were close friends during their undergraduate years at NNU and began meeting weekly to discuss "geek speak"—their term for theology and science. As the two shared life, Trevor's desire to develop a multidisciplinary clinic connected with Jeff's interest in autism. Eventually this led Jeff to introduce Trevor to the board of directors at CHS.

The board decided to fund the integrated clinic for the first year, but by spring 2010, it was apparent that CHS could not based therapy and medical services to improve patient functioning and quality of life.

"I tell parents I care about the diagnosis, but what I really care about is what's next—the 'what do we do from here," says Jeff Hall, Ph.D. and licensed clinical psychologist. He expands on the favorite part of his job: "It's that moment when parents see their kids as God created them to be."

His wife Rebekah works part-time as a licensed psychologist at NNH. She shares, "I can't separate my faith from what I do and support the project anymore, and the clinic faced closing its doors. It was then that these two NNU psychology graduates and seven other clinicians bought into NNH, "We are a resource and a checkpoint for families as they develop community ties and meet the developmental challenges of home, school, the community and the workplace," Trevor explains. the way I encourage people to help themselves. I feel like what I do is God's work because I'm help-

LLC as partners. Together they are changing the way complex care is given to children in the Boise Valley with developmental, emotional and behavioral differences like autism spectrum, anxiety, mood, impulse control and central nervous system disorders.

Trevor explains, "The power of an integrated program is the communication and collaboration available within person-centered therapies, and psychological and medical interventions. We are a resource and a checkpoint for families as they develop community ties and meet the developmental challenges of home, school, the community and the workplace."

Just over two years after its formation, NNH, LLC is a premier diagnostic and treatment center that combines under one roof the expertise of a number of practitioners with specialties ranging from subspecialty medical care to occupational therapy. NNH practices state-of-the-art diagnostic procedures that allow for a multi-layered look at a person's biological, neurobehavioral and individual skills. Ultimately, the team aims to offer evidenceing my patients to know themselves better, repair relationships and practice communication, patience, love and understanding."

Jeff continues, "I see what I do as a nontraditional ministry. Caring for people in their times of hurt and brokenness is active participation in Christ's redemption of the world—His redemption of creation. My role in that is being with families in their suffering."

It is clear that perseverance has paid off. God is working through the hearts and expertise of the clinicians at NNH and is pouring out His blessings. In return, NNH is blessing the children it helps, the families that support those children and the community's health systems. Their example of going beyond the standard of care in their field is truly "a more excellent way."

FACULTY LOVING CUP

DO YOU HAVE THE FACULTY LOVING CUP?

Return the Faculty Loving Cup to campus for the Centennial Kickoff at Homecoming & Family Weekend 2012 to earn 10 additional points for your society and a Centennial bookset.

Perhaps the most significant development of student life in the early years of Northwest Nazarene College was the formation of Athletic-Literary Societies during President DeLong's tenure. New students were randomly assigned to one of the six societies. Points were then earned through the year for participation, spirit, sports and literary events such as debates and plays. At the end of each semester, the society with the most points won the coveted Faculty Loving Cup.

REPRESENT YOUR SOCIETY

Join us at Homecoming & Family Weekend for the Athletic-Literary Society Reunion. Be sure to RSVP early at nnu.edu/homecoming or (208) 467-8843 to receive a free society t-shirt and to earn extra points for your team.

ARY SOCIETIES Family Weekend!

As one of the three original Athletic-Literary Societies started in 1927, the Olympians were named after the Grecian Olympic Games. They also won the Faculty Loving Cup for the first two semesters of its existence.

"Let's get the job done, and show them we're as crazy as we were back then!" - Gary Goode, Class of 1969

ALPHA DELTA PHI

Members of A.D.P. chose their name to represent scholarship, literature and athletics. The Greek letters, "A.D.P.," stand for Aristotle the philosopher, Demosthenes the orator and Pheidippides the athlete.

"Plunge ahead big team!" - Gary Waller, Class of 1972

SIGMA LAMBDA ALPHA

The Greek letters "S.L.A." were chosen in 1927 to signify success, leadership and aggression.

"SLA is #1 now and always!" - Darl Bruner, Class of 1976

LAMBDA SIGMA PHI

Growth in the NNC student body led to the creation of Lamda Sigma Pi in 1938. As noted in the 1947 "Oasis," "The L.S.P.'s accepted their challenge, three things for which to strive —literary excellence, spirituality and personality."

"Join me in the giant homecoming competition as we, once again, WIN. Our motto for this centennial blast is 'Let's Score Plenty!" - Lilburn E. Wesche, Class of 1951

ATHENIANS

Two additional societies were created in the fall of 1956 to spread out the growing student body—the Athenians and the Spartans.

"Blessed is the man who by excellence of hand and speed of foot takes strength and daring—the highest of prizes." - Pindar

SPARTANS

Naming the Spartans and the Athenians as such made a total of three Greek societies and three Greek letters societies.

"Let's go Spartans! Come back for Homecoming and help capture the Centennial Loving Cup!" - Randy Craker, Class of 1973

NEW FACULTY AND STAFF WELCOMED TO NNU

NNU designated as approved National Center of Play Therapy Education

The Adventure Play Therapy Center (Center) at NNU has earned designation as an approved Center of Play Therapy Education by the Association for Play Therapy (APT) and will offer training courses for playtherapy graduates, postgraduates and supervisors. Additionally, publications and presentations will be generated to benefit students, faculty and practitioners. These programs may be applied to satisfy state licensing requirements and to earn the Registered Play Therapist (RPT) and Supervisor (RPT-S) credentials conferred by APT.

The Center was launched by NNU's Assistant Professor of Counselor Education and Director Lori Fairgrieve, Ph.D.

"Because the increasing use of play therapy is boosting demand for more university offerings, APT applauds NNU President Dr. David Alexander and Department of Counselor Education Chair Dr. Brenda Freeman for approving the establishment of the Center," says APT CEO Bill Burns, CAE. "We are confident that under the leadership of Dr. Fairgrieve it will significantly advance our growing field and serve those who counsel clients, particularly children, in schools, public agencies, private practices and other venues."

APT, a national professional society with 44 state branches, estimates that play therapy is routinely utilized by thousands of licensed psychologists, social workers, counselors, and marriage and family therapists inside and outside the United States.

3 School of Science and Mathematics received $84,000 grant from ISDA

The Idaho State Department of Agriculture gave the School of Science and Mathematics an $84,000 grant in November to continue research that combines agriculture with engineering.

In an effort to collect accurate, real-time monitoring of crops, Assistant Professor of Physics and Engineering Dr. Duke Bulanon, along with undergraduate students Paulo Salvador (São Paulo, Brazil) and Mark Horton (Nyssa, Ore.), began experimenting with unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs) last year. NNU researchers equipped UAVs with a multispectral imaging sensor that will capture images in both visible and near-infrared bands and deployed the UAVs in the orchards of Parma and Caldwell to ensure the harvest will remain healthy, disease-free and pest-free.

Aerial monitoring is by no means a new idea; for years farmers have been paying for satellites to capture images of their crops or for pilots to fly over their land snapping photos to help recognize potential health issues. Both techniques, however, are costly and time-consuming. These photos also do not show the grower what is going on within the crop.

Special images from the UAV will allow farmers to see invisible changes in how a plant reflects light when it undergoes water stress, nitrogen deficiency or disease infestation, immediately showing growers exactly what changes are needed to produce a healthy crop.

4 Christian Colleges of Distinction and U.S. News & World Report list NNU

Northwest Nazarene University was featured on CollegesofDistinction.com, a website dedicated to honoring schools nationwide for their excellence in student-focused higher education.

NNU President Dr. David Alexander said, "At Northwest Nazarene University, we focus on the whole person—heart, soul, mind and strength. We strive to be a transformative learning community, educating for the life God intends."

Colleges and universities are nominated for participation in Colleges of Distinction[™] through high school counselors' recommendations as well as quantitative research. Once nominated, the colleges are assessed using the four distinctions: student engagement, quality of teaching, vibrancy of the college community and success of graduates. Schools featured on Collegesof-Distinction.com must meet minimum standards in each category, and NNU was found to excel in all four criteria.

NNU was again named a 2013 "Best Regional University in the West" by U.S. News & World Report. Ranked in the top-tier, NNU ranked 41st out of 118 recognized institutions. According to U.S. News & World Report, there are 625 universities in one of four geographic regions—North, South, West and Midwest—in this category of institutions that are ranked against their peer groups.

5 Dean of Education, Social Work and Counseling appointed

Alumna Paula Kellerer, Ph.D., was recently appointed dean of NNU's School of Education, Social Work and Counseling (ESWC) and will also continue her responsibilities as chair of the Department of Education.

Kellerer, an '85 graduate, joined the NNU faculty in 2010 and directed the Educational Leadership: Superintendent (Ed.S.) program in addition to collaborating to secure approval from the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges for the university's first doctoral program. She previously served for six years as the Chief Academic Officer in the Nampa School District—the third largest district in Idaho.

Kellerer follows Dr. Jim Bader who served as dean of the School of ESWC for the past six years.

NNU to honor 100 recipients with Centennial Medallions

One hundred medallions will be awarded to alumni and friends of NNU as part of the Centennial Celebration, highlighting the real and symbolic contribution of these individuals. All 100 recipients will be announced at the Alumni Chapel on Friday during Homecoming & Family Weekend 2012, and the first 25 recipients will be honored at that time as well. These recipients symbolize the sacrifice, commitment and achievements of hundreds of other alumni and friends of the University.

6 NNU enrolls strong academic class

President David Alexander reported enrollment numbers that record a strong class of freshmen as well as growth in graduate programs. "Enrolling 2,052 students highlights their desire for an education that blends high academic rigor and a Christian perspective."

Overall, numbers for 2012 indicate growth in graduate and doctoral students. The registrar reports 1,295 undergraduate and 757 graduate students registered for a total enrollment of 2,052.

"This class is considered one of the best academically prepared groups in recent years. This is reflected by higher SAT/ACT and GPA scores," stated Vice President for Enrollment and Marketing Stacey Berggren. An indicator of the intellectual quality of students pursuing an NNU education is reflected in the average GPA of the incoming freshman class, which is 3.54.

To meet the increasing demand for graduate programs in social work and counseling, a site has been added in Twin Falls and Idaho Falls, along with continuing hybrid and online delivery of courses. "The addition of the Ed.D. program, now in its second year, continues to expand the impact NNU will have in preparing dynamic leaders in school districts and state agencies across the Northwest," said Berggren.

Jonathon Bouw exhibit showing in the Freisen Galleries

Friesen Galleries is pleased to host the original illustrations of Jonathon Bouw's latest work The Boy, the Kite & the Wind. Bouw is the former chair of NNU's Department of Art.

Authored by Al Andrews, the book received a 2012 Gelett Burgess Children's Book Award for outstanding contribution to children's literature.

Bouw's original work will be on exhibition through Nov. 14. All profits from The Boy, the Kite and the Wind will go to charities that aid those in need such as Compassion International, World Vision, The Red Cross, Restore International, Blood Water Mission and Thistle Farms.

Grammy Award-winning songwriter and author Gloria Gaither said, "In a world in which kids are so bombarded with the material and the immediate, this treasure is a great way to encourage them [children] to see below the surface and to invest their choices in things that cannot always be seen."

The Friesen Galleries are located inside the Brandt Center and are open Monday-Friday (9 a.m.-5 p.m.) or by appointment. Visit www.theboythekiteandthewind.com for more information.

NEW ATHLETIC DIRECTOR NAMED

Known as a dynamic combination of professional athletic talent and business aptitude, Bill Rapp, 1982 alumnus, was named as the University's new athletic director beginning in October.

"NNU anticipates benefiting greatly from Bill's extensive professional experience in sports management. He is a leader who brings vision and development skills to support and expand on our legacy of athletic and academic achievement," commented Alexander.

Bill brings 30 years of experience with the SAP Open (ATP World Tour) and professional tennis tournaments in the Bay Area and 11 years as the tournament director with Sharks Sports & Entertainment. Bill was the first USPTA proto become a director of the Association of Tennis Professionals (ATP). Early in his career in San Jose, he also managed ticket sales for the San Jose Sharks (NHL).

As the SAP Open tournament director, Bill signed all professional players, including Andre Agassi, Pete Sampras, Andy Roddick and Andy Murray.

President Alexander said, "Bill Rapp is a unique hire for NNU's intercollegiate athletic program. Not only was he a student-athlete at NNU, he has a successful record as a sports entrepreneur. Bill Rapp will grow NNU athletics."

Excited for the opportunity, Bill stated, "When I graduated from NNU I felt prepared for whatever was next. God led me to a rewarding career in teaching, coaching, sports marketing and tournament management. Most importantly, He allowed me opportunities to make a difference in the lives of others."

He continued, "Now, three decades later, I am excited to partner with NNU coaches, staff, alumni and community. Together we will focus on our athletes' academic, physical and spiritual development. Our athletes will train intensely, compete fiercely and will compete and win with class."

Bill and his wife Sherra have three sons, Spencer, Jensen and Anderson.

Men's soccer defeats Simon Fraser

The Crusader men's soccer team was named the GNAC Team of the Week and defender Stephen Marshall was named the Red Lion/GNAC Defensive Player of the Week after the Crusaders defeated nationally 12th-ranked Simon Fraser University 2-1 on Sept. 15.

NNU battled Western Washington University to a 0-0 tie in Bellingham, Wash., and then stunned Simon Fraser in Burnaby, B.C., ending SFU's GNAC-record 24-game unbeaten streak during the impressive road trip.

"Stephen (Marshall) showed why he is one of the best defenders in the region," NNU head coach Coe Michaelson commented. "His leadership and ability to read the game are second to none."

It was the first GNAC Team of the Week honors for an NNU team this year.

Sliger earns 100th career win

The Crusader volleyball team finished the 2012 pre-season with a 6-3 record opening play at the Point Loma Seaside Invitational.

The tournament featured wins for the Crusaders against Point Loma Nazarene (3-0), Cal State Stanislaus (3-1) and Cal State Dominguez Hills (3-0). "Pre-season tournaments are all about learning who you are as a team," commented NNU head coach Jared Sliger. "We learned some important lessons this weekend."

The Crusaders then traveled to the Route 92 Showdown in Hayward, Calif., and earned eighth-year head coach Sliger his 100th career win with a victory over Notre Dame de Namur University.

"Getting to 100 wins either means you have been coaching a really long time, or your teams have been pretty good. It has been a little of both for me. I am so fortunate to coach at this institution," Sliger added.

Senior Carly Dranginis added, "It is an honor to have been a part of such a huge milestone for him in his coaching career. I am thankful for all he has done for me and our program."

Women's golf team plays inaugural match

Freshman Haley Gochnour struck the first competitive shot for the Crusaders at 3:14 p.m. on September 13th as the NNU women's golf team played their inaugural match against The College of Idaho at River Bend Golf Course.

Gochnour, who is from Boise and attended Cole Valley Christian School, went on to lead the NNU team effort with an 85. "It was fun to play our first match and get the season started," commented 14th-year head coach Craig Stensgaard.

Gochnour joins teammates Carleigh Sturm (Colo.), Jessica Knight (Idaho) and Krista Gaona (Idaho).

The Crusaders will travel to the MSUB Yellowjacket Invitational in Billings, Mont., and then play in both the Saint Martin's University Invitational and Western Washington Viking Invitational during the fall season.

NNU hosts Roger Curran Invitational

The NNU cross country program hosted the 5th annual Roger Curran Invitational this September at West Park in Nampa.

The event, which continues its steady growth in the cross country landscape, welcomed six college teams and grew to 26 middle school, high school junior varsity and high school varsity teams this year. A community run/walk was also featured during the morning races.

Named in memorial to the late Dr. Roger Curran of Nampa, all proceeds benefit the H.E.L.P. (Health Education and Leadership Program) scholarship program that provides scholarships to students seeking degrees in a healthcare related field.
