The
Glenda Crews Memorial

SCHOLARSHIP

Born shortly before the stock market crash, times were tough and Glenda was a very sick baby. Her health didn't improve and since doctors and medicine were expensive, Glenda's mother asked her brother Herman for help. Herman's wife, Mabel, couldn't have children but they really wanted a family. Herman and Mabel offered to help by adopting Glenda, so she could get the medical care she needed. This may have influenced Glenda's later decision to train to become a nurse.

Such is the story of a rural upbringing during the depression. Glenda always enjoyed school. Whether for the chance to be with people or to be involved as a musician, school provided an outlet for a 'people' person who lived at a rural route address. As in many small communities, high school sports events were a large element of the community's social life, and became training for Glenda to become a true sports fanatic.

Glenda's main source of entertainment over the many years of her life was sports. She had a great love for baseball and football. Growing up, she listened to all the Pittsburgh Pirate games on the radio. She later adopted the San Francisco Giants, Oakland Athletics, Los Angeles Dodgers, and the Anaheim Angels. There always seemed to be a baseball game on radio or television between April and October. Then the San Francisco Forty Niners and Oakland Raiders would take the baton and run with it until spring training was in sight...and Glenda enjoyed every moment.
